

In 2020, the Arizona Legislature passed Jake’s Law which funds behavioral health services for uninsured and underinsured children who are referred through an educational institution. Funding is authorized for services provided through June of 2022.

Schools that meet the requirements of the law are able to refer students for behavioral health services, regardless of a student’s Medicaid eligibility.

AHCCCS has created example templates of a policy and consent form for schools to use as a model in order to begin referring students who may need services.

Services can be provided by participating providers throughout the state through the three Regional Behavioral Health Authorities (RBHAs).
