Even as Arizona’s 65-and-older population has soared, our state spends significantly less per capita on Medicaid long-term care than the national median, according to Moody’s Investors Service. This makes Arizona a national leader in long-term care. The Arizona Long Term Care System provides health coverage for individuals who are 65 or older, blind or disabled and need ongoing services at a nursing facility level of care.

We were delighted, though not surprised, by Moody’s analysis, which rightly points out that Arizona’s success in holding the line on health spending comes from effective policies, such as enabling folks to live intergenerationally in community-based settings rather than in more costly nursing homes.

Eighty-four percent of Arizonans who qualify for the state’s long-term care system live at home or in a community-based setting, even though due to their illness or disability they are considered to have an “institutional level” of need. The state police not only keep community crime but increase the quality of care and the quality of life for the member and their family, providing the coverage people need and delaying the need for Medicaid.

The Arizona Long Term Care System is community-centered, leveraging the health plans to share in the savings they generate. The health plans are required to be quality-focused and leverage existing programs that connect the needs of the whole person.
